

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How To Find Out.
Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and sealding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

The wind storm last Saturday night unroofed and blew in the gable end of the Jaysville school house, and unroofed a tobacco shed for Isaac Allread in the same locality. C. A. Longfellow, near Fort Jefferson, also had his tobacco shed unroofed, a wind pump and shelter shed blown down and his dwelling moved a few inches off its foundation. Much other damage was done to buildings, fruit and shade trees throughout the city and county. The wind blew hard and strong all day Sunday until long in the night.

The editor of an exchange, who was evidently very much in need of the wherewithal, expressed his feelings thusly: The subscriber who comes in these days and pays the printer is blessed, and in the kingdom to come, he will be given a place a little higher than the angels. His name will be written at the top of the column next to reading matter and nothing will be too good for him. He will get comps to all the harp recitals and have a reserved seat beside the editors, while the delinquent subscriber will have to carry water for the performers and sit up in the gallery.

Mrs. A. F. Koop died at about five o'clock Tuesday evening of lung trouble, at her home, corner West Main and Elm streets. Mrs. Koop had been afflicted with this ailment for the past two or three years, and had been quite poorly all fall and winter, but was able to be up and around until Sunday evening, when she took her bed never to arise, and her death came as quite a shock to her friends and acquaintances. She was a most excellent woman, a kind neighbor and true friend, one whose friends were legion. She is survived by three sisters, and four brothers of the immediate family; her father and mother, Dr. and Mrs. Miesse, having preceded her in death several years ago, as did also her husband. Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the residence, conducted by Rev. A. B. Austin of Hamilton, Ohio, her former pastor, and the remains laid away in the family mausoleum in Greenville cemetery.

"Oak Farm" January 25.

Lest you forget, the Greenville Dramatic Club presents "Oak Farm"—a story of country life abounding in wit, humor and pathos, one of the best, purest and most charming of rural plays—at Opera House, January 25. Tickets now on sale; secure yours at once. Prices remain the same, 25 and 35 cents; no extra charge for reserved seat. Don't forget the date, Friday evening, January 25.

Our Man About Town.

By and by the roses will replace the icicles that now hang from the eaves; people will be asking "Is it hot enough for you?" doors will be flung as wide open as they are now kept tightly closed, and then we shall be wishing that the weather could be evened up just a wee bit and better suited to our comfort.

There is evidently no safe place on this earth. If we take up our abode in the valleys, we are in danger of being flooded and drowned; if we make our home in a mountainous country, an eruption may break out and cover us with hot lava, or be shaken up by an earthquake. Even when we are dead and buried there is no assured peace, the doctors may want to conduct a post mortem. In short, since we have thought it over, life is mighty uncertain and the hereafter more so.

No wonder Ada is greatly agitated over a new steam heating plant, when they have one minister by the name of Ice and another by the name of Snow.

Long Live The King!

is the popular cry throughout European countries; while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung Remedies!" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Paine, Truro, Mass., says: "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Paine's opinion is shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. New Discovery cures weak lungs and sore throats after all other remedies have failed; and for coughs and colds it's the only sure cure. Guaranteed by Wm. Kipp's Sons, druggists. 50c and $1.00. Charge for all Advertising.

The publishers of the three Platteville, Wis., papers, Witness, News and Journal, have lately agreed upon a schedule of advertising rates applicable to cards of thanks, announcements of lodge, church and all entertainments, etc., when the same are given for gain, and will hereafter exact a fixed charge for this class of business. It's a sensible move, one which many papers throughout the country have already adopted and which very many more should adopt. Advertising space is part of the publisher's stock in trade. There can be no more valid reason for his giving it away for the pecuniary benefit of any other person or set of persons than there is that the merchant should give away his goods, or the farmer his produce. The argument that he "has to issue the paper anyhow and must fill up with something," is no better than that the farmer has his farm anyhow and the growing of a little extra produce will not cost him much. A festival committee might just as well go to the local grocer and ask him to supply the edibles and red lemonade free, as to ask the publisher to donate his advertising space, his own labor and the labor of his employees without due recompense. Many weekly papers contain in each issue enough free notices, that ought to be paid for, to amount to $15 or $20, and if they insisted upon just payment for their labor and space, the same as the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker, they would add materially to their annual receipts. Perhaps one publisher in a town cannot bring about a reform in this regard, where the public has become educated to impose upon the newspapers, but a mutual agreement similar to that effected by the Platteville papers, strictly adhered to, will result in the bettering of the newspaper man's finances. All advertising should be paid for, and the line should be sharply drawn.

A Poet Physician.

Hearing of Dr. Goldsmith's great humanity, a poor woman, who believed him to be a physician, once wrote to him begging him to prescribe for her husband, who had lost his appetite and was altogether in a very sad state. The kind hearted poet immediately went to see her and after some talk with the man found him almost overwhelmed with sickness and poverty.

"You shall hear from me in an hour," said the doctor on leaving, "and I shall send you some pills which I am sure will do you good."

Before the time was up Goldsmith's servant brought the poor woman a small box, which on being opened was found to contain 10 guineas, with the following directions:

"To be used as necessities require. Be patient and of good heart."

No Reward Offered.

"Have you lost anything, madam?" asked the polite floorwalker of the square jawed, austere looking shopper who stood before the "Lost and Found" window of the large department store.

"Yes, sir," she replied; "I've lost 114 pounds of husband in a light brown suit, with black derby hat, small tuft of hair on its chin and a frightened look. I lost it in a crush at the fancy goods counter. It's probably wandering through the building in search of me, and I thought perhaps you could find it easier than I can. I want it on account of a bundle it is carrying under its arm."—Woman's Home Journal.

Absorbing.

"What are you reading that causes you to smile so delightedly?"
"I beg your pardon."
"I ask you what are you reading? Something new in fiction?"
"Fiction? Just a trace."
"Any poetry?"
"Well, that's more like it."
"Not philosophy?"
"Plenty of it."
"Oh, come! What are you reading?"
"The report of the secretary of agriculture. Don't bother me."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MRS. ANNA F. COSTON.

Inventor and Maker of Distress Signals Used at Sea.
To look at Mrs. Anna F. Coston as she sits at her desk in her little office in lower New York one would never guess that she is an inventor and manufacturer of so grim, so unfeeling, so implicitly tragic a commodity of merchandise as distress signals for use at sea—signals of such conspicuous excellence, too, that they have been adopted by the army and navy, the revenue service and the life saving and lighthouse bureaus, besides being approved and recommended by the department of commerce and labor. With her fresh complexion, laughing blue eyes, carefully marcelled pompadour and dainty lingerie waist, Mrs. Coston might be anything on earth sooner than the head of a commercial enterprise and the inventor of a signal that goes wherever sails spread and steam drives on the waters of the navigable globe.

"I was born and educated right here in New York," said Mrs. Coston. "As a girl I did a good deal with chemistry, and later I worked at it with a tutor in Germany. After my marriage my husband's poor health made it desirable that I should familiarize myself with the details of marine signal manufacture, and when in 1901 he died as the result of an accident in his laboratory I was able to step into his place. The Coston signal—the red flare, burning more than a minute on shore—had been in use by the United States life saving service ever since that service was organized, but what first brought to my mind the necessity of adapting it to the uses of a distress signal for use by ships at sea was the disaster to the Bourgoine, when her lifeboats were out three nights, unable to signal any passing vessel.

"I consider the development of our distress outfit my most important work. All passenger steamships, freight steamers, tugboats, barges, excursion steamers and merchant ships are compelled to carry it by order of the board of supervising inspectors.

"I have also invented a telegraphic code of night signals that has been adopted and is in use by the United States weather bureau and the army signal and transport services. Carrying out my husband's work, I developed a code of steamship night signals which the companies have registered at Washington the same as their funnel marks and private flags. They constitute in part the brands or trademarks of the various concerns and are guarded with the utmost jealousy."

Mrs. Coston's laboratory and factory are on Staten Island, and the work in these busy places receives her personal supervision.—New York Tribune.

A Change of Dress.

A woman's dress is her source of greatest personal comfort or otherwise. All the way from a fresh ribbon in her lingerie to her best street costume she cannot undervalue the importance of taste and neatness and comfort.

One thing of first consideration is the change of dress. This has more to do with her peace of mind than she usually realizes. Cleanliness is the keynote to everything healthy and everything beautiful. No less is it the keynote to everything comfortable.

If one would stop and think of all the virtues of "change"—of all the ways in which it is preached—one would begin to place some confidence in it. There is change for the eyes, the mind, the nerves, the muscles, the stomach. Then why not the dress as often as it is practical and comfortable? Clothes certainly last longer through frequent rests.

Nothing is so refreshing after coming in from a country tramp or wearisome journey through city streets as a pair of cozy slippers, a soft evening blouse, a trailing, dainty skirt and hair combed and smoothed into order. The more complete the change of costume the greater the comfort. The greater the comfort the better the health. Muscles relaxed and a clean soft skin, flesh soothed by change of material, all exert a restful and freshening influence over the body.

Dressing the Windows.

Nothing spoils the appearance of a house more than window shades of a hue which does not correspond with the paint of the woodwork or which
